Gures Dyspepsia;

How to Keep Peaches from

At last we have a remedy for so often sweeps away the crop day. just as it is ripening. This is a solution known as self-boiled lime-sulphur,

Heretofore nothing could be done to prevent the spread of the rot because the usual spraying materials caused too much injury to the leaves of the trees.

An insect known as curculio helps to spread the rot by gouging holes in the peaches. Sometimes this bug punches holes in the fruit for the purpose of depositing its eggs, but more often it seems to do so out of pure deviltry. The rot generally starts from these wounds.

Paris green would poison the curculio, but it injures the foliage of the tree. Likewise bordeaux mixture would control the rot, but it is even more disastrous to the leaves than Paris green. As a substitute for Paris green a poison known as lead arsenate is used and it has lately been found by the U.
